REALIZING THE VALUE OF AN IMPORTANT LEGACY

Superman Soars Again

Superhuman strength is just one of the traits that made Superman one of the most effective and popular superheroes of all time. But even he might not have known he could flip the comics collecting hobby upside down. But that is exactly what happened when a copy of Action Comics No. 1, the comic book that introduced Superman to the world in 1938, sold for $6 million in Heritage's April 2024 Comics & Comic Art Auction, making it the most valuable comic book in the world. Graded CGC Very Fine+ 8.5, this issue from the Kansas City Pedigree is one of the world's finest copies. Only two other unrestored issues featuring Superman's first flight – or, at least, his first leap over a tall building – have ever graded higher.

From Salem to Spotlight

Nearly two-and-a-half centuries after its creation, the first broadside edition of the Declaration of Independence printed in Massachusetts sold at Heritage's July 2024 Historical Platinum Session Auction for $2,895,000. The centerpiece for the event, this extraordinary document is one of only 13 broadside editions printed between July and August 1776. They were created in printshops across Pennsylvania, New York, Rhode Island, New Hampshire, South Carolina and Massachusetts; this example was printed by John Rogers in Salem, at the shop owned by Ezekiel Russell, whose shop also published The American Gazette in 1776. There are only six recorded copies of this broadside, with just two – including the one sold in this auction – in private hands. Other surviving copies reside at Harvard University, Georgetown University, the Massachusetts Historical Society and the Peabody Essex Museum.

Iconic Jersey Hits Auction Grand Slam

Of everything he accomplished on the baseball diamond throughout a career so prolific that many still consider him the greatest player of all time, few events captured the fascination of the sports world as much as the home run Babe Ruth hit in Game 3 of the 1932 World Series. New York Yankees legend pointed toward the outfield seats and then deposited a pitch from Chicago Cubs pitcher Charlie Root, a blast that came to be known as "The Called Shot." The flannel grey jersey Ruth wore that day sold for $24,120,000 to drive Heritage's August 2024 Summer Platinum Night Sports Auction to $61,906,602, making it the most successful sports auction of all time. The event made Ruth's jersey the most valuable sports collectible, nearly doubling the result for a high-grade Mickey Mantle 1952 Topps card sold at Heritage in August 2022 for $12.6 million.
